

MASTER OF ARTS IN THE HUMANITIES

Full scholarships available

A new, one-year MA

Seeking extraordinary students to do the hard thinking our time demands

Ralston College, a new institution of higher learning in Savannah, Georgia, is a revival and reinvention of the traditional university. Its first academic program is a one-year Master of Arts in the Humanities, focusing on the theme of 'the self' in philosophy, literature, and the arts.

The program is divided into four terms of intense intellectual work, first in Greece, then in Savannah. Students will face the challenge of discovering—and recovering—what the human self has meant, historically, across diverse times and cultures, and how this concept continues to inform the existential assumptions and convictions of our current moment.

All students will receive full scholarships. Applications will be reviewed on a rolling basis until the application deadline of May 21st.
